

DIPLOMA IN JOURNALISM

What is Diploma in Journalism?

A diploma in journalism is an undergraduate specialised professional course in journalism. On completion of the course, individuals are awarded with the diploma. Students wishing to enrol in the programme must ensure their college is either approved by the UGC. The minimum required qualification to pursue a diploma in journalism is successful completion of 10+2. The course duration of a diploma in journalism varies from college to college. The duration of the course can be extended up to 2 years.

Students enrolled in the course are provided with the training to become efficient to work in the news media house. They learn how to write news for newspapers, television, digital media and radio. Students also learn anchoring and reporting during the course. There are numerous career options for graduates of diploma in journalism such as news presenter, news producer, production executive, reporter, news editor, video journalist, content writer, proof reader and numerous others.

Diploma in Journalism Eligibility

Aspiring individuals who want to enrol in a diploma in journalism programme are required to fulfil the minimum eligibility criteria.

- Individuals are required to complete class 10+2 from a recognised board.
- They must acquire a minimum of 50 percent in 10+2 in any subject.

Diploma in Journalism Admission Process

The admission process for admission in a diploma in journalism programme varies from institution to institution. Several institutes conduct entrance examinations to provide admissions, while other institutes provide direct admissions or on a merit basis. The standard admission process involves following steps mentioned below.

- Register for admission in the respective college
- Appear in the entrance examination if conducted.

Scope of Diploma in Journalism

There are high career prospects for a diploma in journalism. Students enrolled in the programme are provided with professional training to work in the mainstream media.

They learn anchoring, reporting, and writing for media such as newspapers, television, digital media and radio. Individuals enrolled in the course have numerous career options to choose such as radio jockey, video jockey, anchor, content writer, news editor, reporter, video journalist and numerous others.

Those who want to pursue a higher education may opt for a PGD in journalism and mass communication. Apart from this, they may opt for a Bachelor of Journalism. Further, they can opt for a master's in the relevant discipline such as MA in journalism and mass communication. After completion of a master's degree, they can opt for a PhD or MPhil in the same.

Benefits of Studying Diploma in Journalism

There are numerous benefits of a diploma in journalism. Students get exposed to the real life work culture of the industry. They get to learn a lot through internships in media houses. The industry is rapidly expanding and upgrading itself with the emergence of digital media. Nowadays, there are various you tube channels that serve as primary sources of news, news websites are also growing in vast numbers. People nowadays read news from news websites. The opportunities are vast for students enrolled in the diploma in journalism course. They can work in broadcast media, print media, digital media as well as radio.